

AgencyHabits - UI Visual Brief

Hey Ivona! Before we move into UI design, I want to make sure we're fully aligned on the visual direction. This is short - about 5 minutes. Most of the strategic work is already done, so this is just about confirming the visual system we're building on.

Section 1 - Brand Foundation

1. Your current brand has a distinct visual identity - the bold typography, the abstract gradient imagery, the minimal palette. Which of these feel non-negotiable to you? *

e.g. "The wordmark stays as-is", "The purple/blue gradients are core to who we are", "Reckless Neue is locked"

2. Do you have a brand guide or brand document we can reference?

Even a loose one - color codes, usage rules, anything that captures the visual rules of the brand.

3. Could you share the Figma file and/or Framer project for the current site?

If there's a brand guide, font files (especially Reckless Neue), or any other design assets - please include those too. It'll save us from reconstructing things that already exist.

Section 2 - The Visual World

4. Walk us through the visual textures and imagery you use - the abstract gradient backgrounds, the color palette, the photography if any. Are there more variations we haven't seen on the current site?

We want to understand the full range of what exists, not just what's currently published.

5. We're planning to build a color system for content categories - each topic (Business Development, Finance, Leadership, etc.) gets its own visual treatment. Would you be open to extending your existing gradient palette to support this? And if so, are there any colors that feel off-brand? *

We'd stay close to your existing visual language - just expand it systematically.

6. Are there any visual references - outside the agency world, that you find inspiring right now?

Could be a media brand, a SaaS product, an editorial publication. Anything that captures a feeling you want to bring to AgencyHabits.

Section 3 - First Impression

7. When a $750K-$3M agency founder lands on the site for the first time, what should they feel in the first 3 seconds? *

e.g. "This is for someone like me", "These people know what they're talking about", "This is premium but not corporate"

8. Is there anything in the current design you'd like to move away from?

No wrong answers - could be a color, a layout pattern, a general feeling.

Section 4 - Constraints

9. Any hard constraints we should know about before we start?
e.g. no stock photography, specific colors that are off-limits, accessibility requirements

10. Anything else that would help us design something you're proud of?
Open field - whatever feels relevant.
